On the Sidewalk

by Steven Tagarelis

Pacing down a busy street
wearing a suit of cliché
hes focused on himself
its just another day.

He doesnt see the colors of billboards and street signs.
He doesnt see the shiny paint of cars parked in a line.

I think hes deaf to the music of the citys pulsing sounds.
There are no birds no sirens or even voices in the crowd.

But maybe for one moment as we two pass each other hell hear all the songs and hell see all the color.

And Ill thank him for the image of what Ill never be.
Excuse me, he says
as he knocks into me.

Beautiful
by Meredith Byers

Those porcelain blue eyes, the gorgeous ones that even the sunrise finds a reason to be envious of,
bring a smile to these pale lips.
The tears I once cried no longer exist and the bleakest picture is beautiful when I feel your kiss.

Its the sweet smell of your hair that I miss when I hold my pillow close and exhale getting ready for one more day.
Never would I have believed I could lie down and feel this way
I could cry knowing I wont feel your warmth for days but still smile through salty tears at finding someone who feels the same.

My heart is falling for you over and over again and the words are on the tip of my tongue as I hold you as tight as I can wanting to feel like something to someone.
Your slow smile is leading me through a lonely night.
For once I feel alright, and youre the only star Im wishing on tonight because all the stars in the sky couldnt make me feel the way you do when you tell me you love me in the cold twilight.

Our Nature
by Debra Casallas

The lesser part of man, our physiology
The driving force of nature
A survival strategy
And without doubt, a fearsome force
This biological pull
Where strength will win, and in the end
Blood will rule

The greater part of man, our divinity
The driving force of conscience
A moral capacity
And without doubt, a formidable choice
To see a stranger as your own
But to this end, humanity wins
And the essence of God is known

Dear Boo,
Think of a mitten on a hand
or the way tea
fills the curves of a teacup.
In the same way, there is a place in our lives shaped like you.
Before you came,
we did not even know it was there.
But afterwards, we knew we had always had it,
this quiet and waiting space in the middle of our hearts that you, and only you could fill and even more than the day you came into our world...
We love you.
Mommy & Daddy

You are on your way
and we will always be behind you with each step.

You were a star the day you came home from the hospital,

Instantly, lighting up our lives,

We all knew the treasured "Star Dust" we held,

Grandpa's "Honey Bunny" and Grandma's "Morning Glory",

Our family's heritage has helped shape you into the person you are today,

But you soared yourself, defining your own path,

From your freshman year, you left your mark at Curry College, as your friends, experiences and memories left their imprint with you.

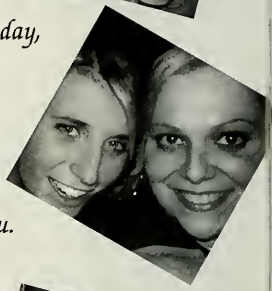
Graduation is not the end, but a beginning

From the members of our family, no longer with us,
to our new blended family,
we are so proud of all of your accomplishments!

We love you!
You are our Star!



CONGRATULATIONS
